Concept Note

Culture, Identity, language, and literature are 'social homes' wherein we want to reside and if we are forced to migrate voluntarily or involuntarily, we often want to create these social homes away from home. The desire for a social home constantly keeps us engaged in inclined towards the homes that are left behind and compels us to create these homes away from homes. This interesting desire caused by crossing the different socio-cultural settings be it national or international leads to formulating the immigrant minorities or diaspora/diaspora minorities in the host societies. Earlier it was difficult for international migrants to be connected with their physical homes, abstract homes, and also the homeland. But with the advancements in Information and Communication Technology (ICT) and compressed time and space due to globalization of the dawn of 21st century facilitated the national and transnational migrants and their mobilities not just to re/connect and re/united with their homes(homeland) but also to re-create those.

There is significant visibility of migrant and diaspora minorities across the national and transnational places today because of the gradual increase in both national and international migrants. There were around 281 million international migrants according to the UN DESA (2020) i.e., means 3.5 – 4 % total world population. In recent times growing fiscal, socio-cultural, and political significance of international migrants in the form of remittances ($89 billion in remittances came to India in 2022 - World bank 2022] and political importance in the soft power – this phenomenon of diaspora has also attracted the attention of economists, politicians, and policymakers, and scholars across the interdisciplinary boundaries of Humanities and Social Sciences.

India is one of the major sources of the global labour regime along with China it has produced huge international outmigration since colonial times. The old colonial mostly unskilled migration and postcolonial skilled migration constituted the formulation of the Indian diaspora community globally. There are 32 million Indians in the diaspora (MEA 2021) constituting one of the largest diasporas in the world (UN and MEA). As the Indian diaspora is a microcosm of Indian society which is culturally, linguistically, religiously, and ethnically diverse the present conference also aims to explore the experiences, narratives, and the way of representations, and patterns of assimilation, hybridization, and acculturation of various Indian linguistic communities in Diaspora. How they express their feelings through various literary and cultural productions like literature, music, arts, films, folk traditions, and so on.

The colonial and post-colonial Indian diaspora was often studied through international perspectives – often through their experiences in the host land. For example, the Indian diaspora in the Caribbean, Indian Diaspora in USA/Canada/Europe/Africa/ Australia, etc. But the regional languages, linguistic associations, engagements, preservations of their culture, customs, food, and dress habits that constitute the mosaic of Indian Diasporas are less discussed. This present conference is particularly interested to look at Indian Diaspora through regional perspectives. It intends to explore the idea of India's regional diasporas and their post-migratory transnational experiences, contributions, development, loss, struggle, and adjustment to new socio-cultural settings. and at the same time how they preserve their regional cultures, languages, literature, traditions, folk songs, arts, food, dress, etc. How did people from the linguistic regions of India migrate to different national and international linguistic and socio-cultural settings how did they preserve, and nurture their regional languages and cultures, how did they contribute to the development of their region, and how did regional languages, lit, and culture prosper in the transnational space? It also looks at the socio-cultural, economic, and political importance of India's regional diasporas for both homeland (regional development) and hosts lands amidst the growing restrictions on international migrants due to the rise of nativism, right-wing nationalisms, security concerns, racial/restrictive citizenship and immigrant policies, bio-warfare, and most recent Covid-19 pandemic.
